Historic Name: Thompson House

Date or Period: 1937

Vicinity: Woodbridge

"Designed by a Connecticut architect, the Thompson house was built of stone from a quarry at Thoroughfare Gap in the Bull Run Mountains. The materials and workmanship in this two-story, Georgian Revival-style house, built just after the great depression, are noteworthy. A distinguishing feature of the stone used in this building is the range of subtle colors: shades of blue, pink, tan, gray, and white. The interior of the central hall-plan house contains some good woodwork, an attractive Georgian-style mantle, and a wrought iron stair rail."
